Newsletter

The Tool Isn't the Author

Artificial intelligence has changed how quickly we can make things. An idea can become an image in seconds. A rough concept can turn into a series of variations before we've fully decided what we're trying to say.

But speed introduces a different question: Who is making the creative decisions?

As someone whose background began in anthropology rather than traditional design, I'm interested in what people bring to technology, their experiences, cultural references, memories, and ways of understanding the world.

When I began experimenting with AI-assisted creative tools, I discovered that generating an image was often the easiest part. The harder work was deciding which direction deserved attention, what needed to change, and whether the result communicated anything meaningful.

That distinction shapes my creative practice.

Through Sidsgermination, I've explored personal storytelling and immersive environments. In From Forgotten Fabric to New Form, I used AI to visualize possibilities for transforming an existing scarf into a new garment. These experiments helped me see how technology can expand creative exploration without replacing the person directing it.
The tools matter. So do the prompts, iterations, revisions, and production choices.

But the work begins with curiosity.

And the most interesting question isn't simply what AI can create.
It's what we choose to make with it.

From the Studio

The Human Variable
An ongoing exploration of human judgment, creative ownership, and AI-assisted storytelling.
Sidsgermination
A personal creative practice exploring memory, identity, immersive worlds, and the possibilities of digital art.
From Forgotten Fabric to New Form
A speculative fashion experiment exploring how generative AI can help visualize new possibilities for an existing garment.

Employee Spotlights

Explore my creative work: https://sidneymagana.github.io/
Sidney Magaña
AI Creative Strategist · Human-Centered Digital Storyteller
magana.sidney@gmail.com
HUMAN / MADE is an independent creative publication documenting experimentation, process, and human-centered creative strategy.

Newsletter

The questions I'm Keeping

As creative tools become more powerful, I want to become more intentional—not less.
What deserves to be made? Who is it for? What perspective does it bring?
Those are the questions I want to carry into every project.
Explore my creative work: https://sidneymagana.github.io/

Recognition and Gratitude

This year has been marked by significant achievements for our company. From surpassing sales targets to launching innovative products, each milestone is a testament to your dedication and hard work. Together, we've not only met challenges but have turned them into opportunities for growth Together, we've not only met challenges but have turned them into opportunities for growth

Looking Ahead

As we look ahead, let's continue to innovate, collaborate, and support one another. Our journey is just beginning, and I am excited about the future we are building together.

Wellness Tip

Remember to take breaks throughout the day to stretch and relax. Small moments of self-care can make a big difference in your well-being.

Stay Connected

Follow us on @bysidneymagana, and @sidsgermination for the latest updates and news. Don't forget to share your experiences and ideas with us!

Feedback

Your feedback is invaluable to us as we strive to create the best possible workplace environment for all team members. We encourage you to share your thoughts, suggestions, and ideas with us. Whether it's about improving our current initiatives, introducing new programs, or enhancing communication channels, your input plays a crucial role in shaping our company's future.
Please feel free to reach out to us via email, our internal communication platform, or directly to your managers.

Closing Note

In closing, I want to express my sincere appreciation for the dedication and passion each of you brings to our company every day. Your hard work and innovative spirit are the cornerstone of our success, and I am continually inspired by the way our team rises to every challenge.